Who is Kery?

Kery is a wife, Mom of 2, health coach, physical therapist, breast cancer survivor, and recovering perfectionist. She recently, through the grace of God, and a lot of heart work through Brave, has experienced the indescribable peace that comes from breaking the chains of anxiety. She is passionate about helping others, being real, sharing hope and love, and lifting each other up. Her and her family have been attending Calvary for three years. Aside from her family of course, she loves Brave, coffee & books. Fun fact, she never leaves the house without earrings.

What will you hear about?

Anxiety. Many of us have a lot, ok too much, experience with this. Let's come together to share our stories, and the joy and peace that is possible when persevering and breaking the chains of anxiety. Can't we all use some fellowship, prayer and hope?!

TRYING TO RAISE COLOR-CONSCIOUS KIDS – Host(s): Jason & Lois Yue Stolee – August 14th – 7PM

Who is Jason & Lois?

Lois was born in New Jersey. She's been told (at Calvary) that her English is really good...because she's Chinese American. Jason was born in Africa. No one has ever told him his English is really good...because he's White. After various other stops (New York, Illinois, Hong Kong, Zimbabwe, Beijing), they met and married in Los Angeles and now live in Auburn. They're seeking to raise their three biracial children (12, 9, and 7) to be aware of not only their own cultural influences, but also the systemic injustices that impact the world around them.

What will you hear about?

Why does it matter that our children be aware of the role race and ethnicity play in society today? What are some ways to start potentially meaningful conversations with our kids? We will share some of our own attempts at being intentional at discussing race, ethnicity, culture, systems, and privilege with our own children in hopes that you'll find yourself encouraged to do the same with your children.
